

Blurb:

Growing up in Philadelphia's Hooper dynasty, the only expectation for Mali Hooper was to marry the 'right' man. A rebel growing up and constantly defying her parents' demands, she joined the FBI instead.

When an undercover agent is murdered, Mali is teamed up with hard-hitting Special Agent Jacob Black to hunt the killer. Mali is convinced the agent's murder ties to the homicide of a housewife, but Jake believes her analysis was flawed and responsible for the agent's death. Determined to prove her theory correct, Mali discovers a chilling connection between both cases. A medically-precise cut and a calling card are found on each victim, and the murders are broadcast on social media. The public loves it!

Splashed across Twitter, YouTube, Periscope, and other venues, the murders are stacking up and there are more questions than answers. Who's behind this and why? How can they stop the carnage when there's no connection between the victims, the murders occur in different cities with different weapons, and the public wants to participate?

Reviews:

"Quite a suspenseful book! Reminds me somewhat of the stories in the J D Robb Death series. This is an author to watch." -Barbara S. ★★★★★

"The correlation between online video games and the possibility of an overlap into everyday life is eerily real." -JBS ★★★★★

"It is definitely a page-turner! What I liked best was the mixing of real life and social media." - Kristie P.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Born and raised in California, KADY HINOJOSA always loved creative writing. However, she took a logic track in college and studied Computer Science. She met her husband, Jose (an Army Aviator), in Washington DC while on active duty in the Navy. After many years of travel, they now live in the Texas Hill Country near kids and grandkids. The bulk of her career was spent working as a Business Analyst/Quality Assurance expert for financial, and other, websites. After retiring, she returned to her love of writing and wove her IT experience into her debut novel, #HuntedLives.
